Scandal Snares Israeli Candidate Admits Cheating On Wife

January 16, 1993 | Los Angeles Times

JERUSALEM -- Benjamin Netanyahu, one of Israel's most popular politicians and a contender for leadership of the right-wing Likud bloc, was caught up on Friday in a sex scandal after charging that rivals were threatening to show a videotape of him cheating on his wife unless he quit the race.

Netanyahu, 43, a former deputy prime minister and ambassador to the United Nations, had gone on the evening television news, the country's most watched TV program, to acknowledge the extramarital affair, and to attempt to turn the smear campaign against his opponents.

But Netanyahu, nicknamed "Bibi" and dubbed Israel's "sexiest politician" in an opinion poll last year, got as much criticism as sympathy as callers to radio talk shows asserted that his integrity was a legitimate political issue and debated his morals.

"A man who two-times his wife while she's at home nursing their baby ... is out only for himself," an angry Tel Aviv woman said on a call-in program.

"Is this a man we should elect prime minister? Where will Bibi be when the country needs him? In bed with a bimbo?" the woman said.

A Jerusalem man, a Likud member, said, "Netanyahu has probably learned a lesson from this, but he should take some time to reflect on it. Let him withdraw from these elections and take time re-establish our confidence in him."

Already dubbed "Bibigate" by Israel's tabloid press, Netanyahu's affair and its aftermath appeared likely to test his efforts to introduce U.S.-style politics in Israel.

Rejecting as outmoded a system that grew out of Zionist and socialist politics in Central and Eastern Europe more than half a century ago, Netanyahu, who is U.S.-educated, has sought in his campaign for the Likud leadership and in fundamental reforms of the electoral system to bring Israel much closer to the U.S. model.

But Israel's best-selling newspaper, Yediot Ahronot, mocking Netanyahu and U.S. politics, juxtaposed pictures of Netanyahu and his wife, Sarah, with President-elect Bill Clinton and his wife, Hillary, under the headline "Look where it got them," referring to romantic scandals that once threatened to upset Clinton's campaign.

The charges in Israel sent shock waves not only through the Likud, where Netanyahu is well ahead in opinion polls to take over the leadership from former Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, but through the whole Israeli political system.

Eli Dayan, the leader of the governing Labor Party in the Knesset, Israel's Parliament, lamented the controversy as "the importation of the vilest political habits from America and England. Private lives have no bearing on public office, and this is as it should be."

But personalities are assuming far greater importance in Israeli politics.

In the last parliamentary elections, Likud tried to use allegations of heavy drinking against Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and suggested he had suffered a nervous breakdown on the eve of the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"The bedroom was the last outpost of Israeli politics that had not been conquered by America," Yediot Ahronot commentator Nahum Barnea wrote. "It is conventionally thought that Israelis have a healthier attitude than Americans to the sex lives of the famous. The Bibi case will enable this to be examined."

Asked who was behind the threat, Netanyahu replied, "It is a senior member of the Likud, who surrounds himself with criminals and does not represent the whole party." While Netanyahu supporters pointed at David Levy, 54, the former foreign minister, Levy supporters said that it was all an election ploy, an effort to re-energize a lagging campaign.

In addition to Levy, Binyamin Begin, 49, son of the late Prime Minister Menachem Begin, is seeking the leadership, as are two former Likud ministers.

Dear Leslie K. Williams,

This letter is to inform you that your gang stalking status has been upgraded to level 4, up from a previous level 3. This means that you are one level away from achieving maximum targeted individual notoriety. Levels are ranked in order of 1 through 5. Your bicycle injury helped increase your status due to taxpayer funds being used to treat you. Ways of decreasing your level include deleting all data of the Thanksgiving event, Yuca Valley incident, and the MTS bus video.

Regards,

Jonathon C.
